

State Supreme Court Sits at University of Louisiana at Monroe

The Louisiana Supreme Court heard oral arguments on four pending cases on April 7 at the University of Louisiana at Monroe (ULM). Six justices held proceedings at ULM as part of an ongoing effort by the Court to educate and to inform students and the general public about the work of the Court.

“For over 15 years, holding court in venues other than the Supreme Court courthouse has been a tradition of the Court. The goal is to provide citizens with a snapshot of the volume, variety and complexity of the Court’s caseload by bringing the Louisiana Supreme Court to them,” said Chief Justice Pascal F. Calogero, Jr.

Prior to oral arguments, Justice Chet D. Traylor, a 1969 graduate of Northeast Louisiana State University, now known as ULM, welcomed the high school and university students in attendance in ULM’s Brown Auditorium. Justice Traylor was elected in 1996 to the Fourth Supreme Court District which includes Monroe.

According to Justice Traylor, “The Supreme Court’s decision to hold court at ULM is an historic and momentous event for the people of northeast Louisiana. The last time the Supreme Court sat in Monroe was June 1894. The people of Louisiana need to know that this is their Supreme Court. This is a rare opportunity to see the Supreme Court in action and the decision-making process which affects all of our lives.”

“It is an honor to have had state law decided on our campus. The Supreme Court’s coming to Monroe is beneficial to the education of the students at ULM and throughout Northeast Louisiana,” said ULM President, Dr. James Cofer.

Not too many years ago, the courts at all levels in our state—and our nation—simply dealt with the law. But with the advent of the 21st Century, their roles have expanded to encompass society's most difficult issues. Louisiana's courts are emerging as national leaders as they successfully employ innovative strategies to address those issues.

Our drug treatment courts, for example, are widely recognized as national models. The evidence is indisputable—they yield impressive savings for taxpayers, reduce recidivism rates and result in higher employment levels among their graduates.

The Court Improvement Program has focused on achieving permanency for children, serving the more than 4000 youngsters who are in the foster care system on any given day. The Families in Need of Services program reaches out to families in a kind of pre-delinquency intervention, and other Court-sponsored initiatives fight truancy, give hope to those who experience domestic violence, and support the best interests of children while they are in the court system.

We have also looked at “best practices” models for reducing delay in the court system and dealing with pro se litigants, those who appear in court without the assistance of an attorney.

Ultimately, we rely on strategic planning, performance auditing and other tools to direct the future of the judiciary in the state, to focus attention and effort on the most effective ways to address appropriate social issues, and to encourage continuous improvement in all areas.

21st JDC Launches Juvenile Courts

Judges in the 21st JDC have begun to serve in a volunteer rotation in the court's two newly-created juvenile divisions under a plan created by the judges of the court. The juvenile divisions were created to help expedite cases involving children, according to 21st JDC Chief Judge Bob Morrison.

The juvenile proceedings are held once a week in each of the parishes encompassed in the in the 21st JDC, which includes Livingston, St. Helena, and Tangipahoa Parishes. Federal guidelines involving the timeliness of children's cases, especially those which involve termination of parental rights leading to adoption proceedings, were the driving force behind the juvenile court's establishment.

"We could not have met these deadlines unless we had done something like this," said Judge Zorraine "Zoey" Waguespack.

New Judges' Orientation

In the Fall of 2002, 25 new district court judges were elected to serve as members of the bench. With this shift in the make-up of the state judiciary, the Louisiana Judicial College conducted a mandatory three-day judicial education program to ready the new judges for the professional challenge that lies ahead.

The cornerstone of the new judges' training is the Judicial Mentoring Project—a collaboration of the Louisiana Judicial College and the Louisiana District Judges Association. "By pairing new judges with experienced judges, the Judicial Mentoring Project is designed to transcend the mere 'how to's' of courtroom procedure by creating a statewide judicial network for sharing ideas and providing emotional support," said 9th Judicial District Court Judge W. Ross Foote, Chairman of the Judicial Mentoring Committee of the District Court Judges Association.

The mentor judges participate in the mentoring program on a voluntary basis. They agree to receive specialized mentoring skills training and to be available at any time to answer calls from the new judge. The mentor and the new judge also agree to visit each other's court while in session and to regularly complete follow-up reports which track the development of the relationship.

The common sentiment shared by the freshman judges and their mentors is that the Judicial Mentoring Project is a big success. As a result it has been held up as a model for the nation by Maureen Conner, president of a Michigan company that specializes in mentoring programs.

Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA)

- A Voice for Louisiana's Children

The Louisiana Supreme Court, now in its second year as manager of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) funds for Louisiana CASA Assistance Program, helps ensure the continued success and direct the future growth of CASA programs across the state of Louisiana.

The mission of Louisiana CASA Association is to ensure that every abused and neglected child in Louisiana has a competent, caring volunteer advocate in all judicial proceedings.

The Court, which assumed fiscal and programmatic accountability and responsibility for distribution of TANF funds in 2000, has seen a dramatic increase in vital CASA statistics from 2001 through 2002.

These numbers are important, according to John Manard, President, CASA New Orleans Board of Directors, and he also says that one must not lose sight of what they actually reflect.

"CASA must set some aggressive milestones and then beat them," Manard said. "For in reality those 'milestones' are individual children. This opportunity for an important helping hand from us will only come once in each of their lives. They are in need because the adult world has already failed them once.

We will either be there for them when they need us or not. We will talk, as we must, about numbers. But they are not really numbers, they are little children who need us. This is about those children."

In 2002, a number of significant areas showed a marked increase:

- The number of active advocates (977)
 - a 36% increase
- The number of children served (2,179)
 - a 31% increase
- The number of new children served (1,118)
 - a 96% increase
- The number of children closed (722)
 - a 25% increase.

Frequently Asked Questions

What is a Court Appointed Special Advocate?

A Court Appointed Special Advocate is a trained community volunteer. Each volunteer is an ordinary person who does extraordinary work for children. They are independent advocates appointed by a juvenile judge to speak for an abused or neglected child's best interests. They come from all walks of life.

What does a CASA volunteer do?

Article 424 of the Louisiana Children's code spells out that each advocate shall research the case and provide independent factual information, monitor compliance with the court's orders and assist the child's attorney in representing the juvenile's best interests. The volunteer will talk to everyone involved in the case and review all files to get a complete picture of the case.

What kind of training do CASA volunteers have?

Training must include roles and responsibilities of the CASA volunteer, the juvenile court process, child abuse and neglect, Louisiana and federal law, confidentiality and record keeping, child development, permanency planning, community agencies and resources, communication and information gathering, advocacy, and cultural competence. Volunteers receive at least 30 hours of training initially and at least 10 hours per year after that.

How do I get a CASA volunteer involved with one of my cases?

Ask for one! Talk to the CASA volunteer supervisor and also ask the judge to appoint a volunteer. If there is a volunteer available you may be able to get one!

How do I volunteer or start a CASA program in my area?

Law Day 2003 - Independent Courts Protect Our Liberties

Law Day - May 1, 2003

Law Day is a time for American citizens to focus on how our freedoms depend on our great system of law. It can be a single day to reflect on our legal heritage or it can encompass a week or more of activities for kids and adults. Ultimately, it is a time for the coming together of bar associations, courts and legal groups with schools and community groups in all aspects of planning a successful Law Day celebration. This year's Law Day theme of "Celebrate Your Freedom: Independent Courts Protect Our Liberties" enables courts to be key players in building community awareness of this year's celebration.

In keeping with the Law Day theme, the Louisiana District Court Judges' Association passed a resolution at the 2002 Spring Judges' Conference supporting district court judges engaging in law related education in the form of opening their courtrooms to students or going into classrooms to teach. Therefore, during the month of May 2003 Louisiana state court judges will be dedicated to reaching out to schools to provide students with an opportunity to learn about the law, the role of a judge and the court system firsthand from members of the judiciary.

Judge White Program To Educate Students on Prison Life

Baton Rouge City Court Judge Trudy M. White, in cooperation with the Louisiana Correctional Institute for Women (LCIW) at St. Gabriel, has begun an educational program for area students.

The program, called the 2003 Lifers Tour with Judge Trudy M. White, brings a number of the 168 women serving life sentences at LCIW at St. Gabriel to Baton Rouge area schools including Catholic High, Southern Lab, St. Joseph's Academy, Baton Rouge Magnet, St. Francis Xavier Catholic, Capitol High, McKinley High, Baton Rouge Community College, and Southern Law School.

The women prisoners discuss prison life, social justice, capital punishment, the criminal justice system, education, rehabilitation and transitioning into society, and peer pressure.

"It's a program designed not only to inform the students about prison life but more importantly to help deter them from ever considering an act which would necessitate a prison sentence," said Judge White. "We hope the women's stories on what brought them to prison will send a message of awareness to the students they will carry with them for the rest of their lives."

IPSO FACTO... Community Involvement Family Affair for Rubin

"The fruit doesn't fall far from the tree" is an expression that definitely applies in 15th Judicial District Judge Edward Rubin's family, especially when it comes to community service. First elected to the bench in 1992 and reelected in 1996 and 2002 without opposition, Judge Rubin has been a role model for students and kids in the Acadia, Lafayette, and Vermilion parishes he has served for many years. A former business law instructor and board member of Boys Club of America, the father of three—LaShon, a teacher and day care provider, Chanda, and Edward II, a recent microbiology graduate of LSU who plans to go to law school—has also been known to roll up his sleeves and serve lunch as a "Chef for A Day" in the St. Genevieve Elementary School cafeteria.

IT'S A FACT:

Daughter Chanda has matched her father's excellence both on the court and in the community. She is currently ranked at #13 on the World Tennis Association Tour and has been ranked as high as sixth in 1996. Additionally, Chanda has received numerous awards for her commitment to community involvement and her work with programs that benefit children, including: the 1997 Arthur Ashe Leadership Award, recognition in 1997 by USA Weekend magazine as one of four "Most Caring Athletes," 1996 Louisiana Special Olympics "Outstanding Celebrity" Award, and a two-time finalist for the Family Circle magazine "Player Who Makes a Difference" award, just to name a few.
